1945, and two hundred and furly-two since 1857; and this while the lacrease of population has been only thirty-four per cent since 1846, and sixty two in the lenger period named. And this result, so surprising instead, falls manifestly below the resulty. Leaving out of the account those branches which were unfortunately omitted in the specific inquiries, and making all possible allowance for the greater accuracy attained in the editorious of the information embodied in the accompanying pages, it is still apparent that the truth has not been resulted upon by the accessor to answer arch questions as were propounded under the law, to divert his mind of the impression of an intimate connection between his answers and the assessment of his taxes. Hence the general tendency to understate results, and an absolute reduct, in numerous instances, to canewr at all. Had those branches which were overlooked been included in the returns, and bosest and truthful answers obtained in all cases to the questions proposed, I am fully persuaded that instead of two hundred and inarty, five millions, we should have had an aggregate of at least three hundred and diffy millions, or considerable over one million of delars par day for every working day in the year. As it is, the result exhibits a rapid and substantial growth in our industrial resources, which is believed to be without a parallel in the history of the world.
